This study aimed to evaluate the effectiveness of four disinfection methods against type III and type II Acanthamoeba trophozoites. The trophozoites were obtained from the supernatant of four trophozoite culture as the inoculum, the trophozoites were treated with antimicrobial agents, inorganic acid disinfectant, organic acid disinfectant and iodophor disinfectant, and incubated at 37 degrees C for 1h, 2h, 3h, 4h, and 6h, respectively. The numbers of live trophozoites after antimicrobial treatment were measured with a Neubauer counting chamber and compared with the control (untreated) culture. The inorganic acid disinfectant and iodophor disinfectant were able to kill type III and type II Acanthamoeba trophozoites within 4h, while the organic acid disinfectant was effective only at 4h. After disinfection with inorganic acid disinfectant, trophozoites treated for 4h had a significant reduction in cell viability by a factor of ~140; by this time, only 2.0% of type III trophozoites could still be cultured. Type II Acanthamoeba trophozoites were more sensitive to disinfection than type III trophozoites at each time-point, with the percentage of kill by inorganic acid disinfectant treatment being ~80 and ~80, respectively. Only the inorganic acid disinfectant at 4h and 6h was able to kill approximately 99.9% of type II Acanthamoeba trophozoites. Overall, the type II Acanthamoeba trophozoites were more sensitive to disinfection treatments and the inorganic acid disinfectant was more effective against both trophozoites types.
