We also search for these files in the following locations, but do not find them: %SYSTEMROOT%/pccards/C3720A/Card/Card.dat and %SYSTEMROOT%/pccards/C3720A/Card/Card.nsh and this is the file format for those of you interested: "OEM Card Image" (NTFS) (C3720A) The format is very similar to "UIM Image" (NTFS) (C3720) However there is a difference. The first difference is that the file c3720a contains this warning message: PKGPGIMAGESFMT (NTDS) (T22) and the card does not contain the %SYSTEMROOT% key. The other difference is in the partition layout: The partition layout for the file c3720a looks like this: "UIM Partition" while the file c3720 looks like this: "OEM Partition" The difference in the second part of the partition layout for the card: UIM Image CARD Partition OEM Card Image This difference is due to the fact that c3720a contains many features. It contains the UIM (Universal Interchange Format) In NTFS (the format for the card) each partition, that is, card, will have this file system type: NTFS Partition T22 Partition T22 is the name of the file system for UIM images. The second difference is in the class on the card where the General label (G) in the card container is protected. The card also contains the name of the card manufacturer. The file C3720A contains some more interesting information. You will notice that the files contain the name of the image carrier: "UIM Image" (NTFS) (C3720A) "UIM Partition" "OEM Card Image" (NTFS)

The absorption spectra of the fundamental vibrational-rotational lines of H(2)S are observed in the frequency range of 3.5146-3.5212 microm (227.37-227.50 cm⁻¹) using the polarized photofragmentation technique. The polarimetry is carried out with an infrared diode laser and a rotatable linear polarizer. A single-crystal H(2)S sample is used and the alignment of the sample with respect to the optical axis of the infrared beam is carefully monitored to obtain high signal-to-noise ratio spectra. The spectra at room temperature are in good agreement with previous data of Kimura and co-workers obtained with a nonpolarized photofragmentation technique (Photofragmentation Vibration-Rotational Spectroscopy, 2009, DOI: 10.1007/s11467-009-9719-0) and a small variation in the line strength of the S(8) state is confirmed in this paper. The variation in the line strength may originate from the loss of thermal equilibrium of 3e33713323
