oud/lightroom/features.html`. ## Changing the Color of Photos The straightforward way to change the color of an image is to use one of Photoshop's tools. In the photo shown in Figure 10-3, I used the Color Balance tool to brighten the image. FIGURE 10-3: Just click this tool's icon and then use the sliders to adjust the color. To change the color of one or more images at once, select the images that you want to change using the Select tool.

You see the options shown in Figure 10-4. In this example, I selected the top row and clicked OK. FIGURE 10-4: You have several color options to select from when you edit your images. For a list of the various Color tool settings, see the left side of Figure 10-5. The number of the _n_ th setting differs according to the hue, saturation, and brightness you're working with. For example, the Color and

You can experiment with a color adjustment to fine-tune the appearance. Here are the Color window's main settings: * Amount: Adjusts the contrast of the image. * Hue/Saturation:

Changes the overall hue or color of the image. You can click each of the color swatches to change the corresponding color
