St Louis Art Museum - April 11, 2015 . LS + Custom Transmissions? This is a very hot item and I don't mean that in a good way. The USF41 transmission is installed in the 4.6 with no other changes. The issue is that there are a large number of different issues with both Ford and GM transmissions. There is no official company that makes parts for these transmissions, so you are out of luck with finding this rebuilt transmission for many years. Even if you get something off of Craigslist or eBay you might not be any happier than when you started. Small transmission companies that build up these transmissions are making the smallest number of parts that they possibly can. In my case, it would be more expensive for me to build the transmission and then rebuild it myself. This is the only way for me to get parts, make a new transmission and bring it into my shop for warranty work. There are a number of parts that are easy to find, but there are far more that are very hard to find. If you decide to go that route you might want to contact someone who is a bit more experienced in making transmissions. n the meantime, welcome to DIY Land Rover. There are many more parts that are easy to find than you might think. We have a fairly complete Land Rover catalog that has parts for every version of every Land Rover from the late 70's to the early 2000's. You can use this to find various parts that will make your build easier or to find parts you can modify your vehicle to have the features that you want. For example, on the Aussie LS we can do a simple bolt on that will give you a clean radiator, easy access for the engine bay, and the radiator will fill the space for the low mount crossmember and have room for 5 gallon fuel tanks. From Santa Anita 13-R1 (39-1) White Sand 129124 to Gulfstream Thoroughbreds. That's a DQ point for racing schools for our import paddock. The first school of the day raced not long ago at the old Las Vegas track. The track was a dirt track in 1954 and closed in 1967. Was it a kangaroo court. There were 83 starters. Mar 29, 2015Å .
