In-game goals and tackles are now powered by motion capture technology and depend on players' strength, skill and ability in dealing with the ball. To simulate this, individual players will now display different strengths and weaknesses in the build up to a shot or a tackle. Head movement in a shooting situation will be key, as will a player's ability to correctly sense the right time to step inside the movement of a player with the ball. Players will now show more realistic behaviour before a shot and will complete their movements in a more real-life way. Tactics are also affected by this new motion capture-based gameplay, with the direction of play impacting shot selection, player positioning and ball movements in more realistic ways. HyperMotion Technology, together with the exciting new player animations, can be seen as game-changing. It will mark a new generation of football gameplay that comes with an unprecedented level of authenticity and detail.
