In the not-so-distant future, there was war between the country of Lore and the continent of Theradain. The nation of Lore had a fortunate fate, because during the war, an extremely strong and unimaginably powerful weapon was created and dropped from the sky. This blue-colored light briefly descended, and their magical power was not only terrifying, but also created a profound magical energy. From the blue-colored magic, an enormous amount of energy was concentrated, and was subsequently exploded, scattering the energy to the four winds. At the time of the explosion, the immense magical energy was concentrated in the crystal sphere of a magnificent nebula, and it was believed that the energy was moved there. It was this sphere that fell with the blue-colored power and became the legendary Elden Ring. On the continent of Theradain, a single magical power source started to project a massive life-giving light during the war, and the Great War was determined to be over. The blue light continued to fall for two months, and the life-giving energy gradually descended. However, this magical power was unable to contain its power, and eventually exploded, creating a large magical anomaly. It is possible that the power of the Elden Ring is born by such a magic. The shockwave of the explosion was all but the destruction of the continent of Theradain, and the Great War had yet to be resolved. • Prologue of Land Between Lore and Theradain [Note] Players who do not have access to the iAP (In-App purchase) may purchase experience points for purchase with the in-game currency.
