Not that I keep track of time. I moved here at the age of five with my mom, my grandparents, and my great aunts, great uncles, and cousin. The immigrant experience was the greatest gift I could've ever been given, and every single day since, I've been an immigrant. My father eventually came to join us and stayed for a year, then another and another; we've since added our stepbrother and step-cousin to the mix, and I'm now an aunt to two adorable little girls. I am a stay-at-home mom and so I am blessed to have the time to pursue my dream of fashion, art, and artistry with my two girls. Even still, my grandfather is the busiest man I know, and every day, he's the chief among my resources; and, as I'm sure you'll agree, he's a man of few words. In the end, I was the last person in the world that needed to know where he was or why he wasn't back home by the time I went to bed each night. So when he asked me at my third interview that I have no idea what
