2. 27" / 4K Ultra HD Display - Plastic Carrying Case Fantasy Movie Starters: Guardians of the Galaxy Vol.2 .. At the time of writing, I'm using a 15" MBP from 2010, with an NVIDIA GeForce GT 650M mobile GPU. I'm on a modest connection with 128 kbit/s down and 64 kbit/s up. No issues downloading a single torrent, or just a few. It's also worth noting that I use the open source Transmission Bittorrent client. No speed or stability issues with that specific client. I only experienced issues downloading a single torrent while searching for several. After the first 30 odd searched within the hours after I posted the original post, I haven't seen another issue from that point. I'm only a normal user on My ISP's business broadband plan. We're over our connection's limit so I'd say be cautious of that until further information is provided. I've also run my system's Activity Monitor, and the Download speed has remained consistent at 100mb/s on average. So, if I'm to be honest with this issue and myself, I can say, that I've experienced the problem of my torrent download get stuck on 10 - 20% of the download or see spikes around that point. I've had to restart my computer once when downloading different torrents, so it's not like a new flaw came up since, I assume, there has been time to iron out issues with the current software or connecting method with the BT client. I downloaded the latest release of Transmission (2.55) on to it's latest build. I have absolutely no idea if that has any relation to the issue. The torrent I was downloading before the issue started was going slow, so I aborted the download, and continued to search with another torrent. That was the one that started giving me the issues. I can also confirm that. As I'm typing this, I'm downloading with another torrent and it's sitting at 67%. With my connection, I can easily download a torrent like that at 60% or more in a half hour download, but I'm not sure what the plan is on TPB's end. I'll update if I find anything further. Trying to put a good spin on this, I understand the issue is more than likely a hardware issue, as Transmission and BT client both work fine with other clients that use the same hardware. I'm going to hold off
